

High levels of nitrogen can weaken your grass. It decreases drought tolerance, increases the risk for insect damage and promotes weed growth. Improperly timed fertilizer application also increases the risk for nutrient runoff pollution to our waterways.

Skip the Spreader

Did you know?

Spring application of fertilizer and weed and feed products can decrease the overall vigor of cool season grasses like fescue or Kentucky bluegrass

University of Kentucky
College of Agriculture,
Food and Environment
Cooperative Extension Service